

Jonathan Hillier

Question: What is false about paired programming?

The driver is the one who thinks tactically and focuses on writing the code.

The observer thinks strategically about where to go next while also writing code

The observer reviews each line of code as the driver types and catches minor errors

Paired programming is slower when task complexity is low but yields higher quality code with less bugs